

In the valleys below the graceful Kijani Hills, sat a small town known as Gomongo. RiverSafi flowed right through the middle of the town, and its sparkling waters made Gomongo's environment even more appealing...

Over time, there was noticeable change in the environment.. The garbage bins were now insufficient for all the people.Piles of waste from plastic bottles, polythene papers, and other garbage began to spill over from the bins, and litter the narrow streets.

Children, who were more vulnerable to diseases, began to fall sick. Many of them contracted respiratory diseases which took long to heal.

The once beautiful neighbourhood was now filled with rubbish and a bad stench. Rodents, flies and mosquitoes multiplied, as the dumping site overflowed with waste. It was a messy affair, and the residents began to get concerned.
